pilgrimage to uluru

the journey

The Pilgrimage to Uluru is a journey to the very heart of Australia. We grab a bus load of adventurous high school students and youth workers from the edges of Australia, and head inwards. It's a chance to see our country in a whole new way, and an opportunity to do something that many Australians will never experience. We take the chance to visit Indigenous cultural centres along the way, to give a broad picture of how our history has effected modern Australia.

"This trip was a massive wake up call that this world isn't perfect and I think if together we could help make it a better place for everyone, bring everyone back together. It could really be something special."

- Emily, Victoria 2013

the destination

Situated near the dead-centre of the continent, and on average 2,500 kms from any capital city, is Uluru. A place full of culture and history that shows off both the best and worst of Australia. While the journey is the fun part, the destination is where eyes have been opened, and young people have discovered a determination to have an impact on the future.

the people

Fusion Australia have been working with young people and their communities for over 50 years. In 2000 we started working with schools - under the Schools in Harmony banner - to bring change to the way young people see themselves and each other. The result has been thousands of teenagers getting involved, and over 70 bus trips to Uluru since 2001.
